

Abstract

The present invention provides methods for identifying inhibitor compounds capable of reducing interaction between a nuclear protein fragment comprising a signature motif and a liganded nuclear receptor. The nuclear protein of the invention functions as a bridging factor to enable the liganded nuclear receptor to interact with a transcription initiation complex, which leads to activation or repression of target gene expression.